Ford said Tuesday that the company is recalling 336,000 small SUV and crossover vehicles due to a faulty airbag inflator. The recall comes a year and a half after a crash involving an Explorer caused the death of a mother who was a passenger in her SUV's front passenger seat and injured her infant daughter. The recall also includes four of Ford's most popular small SUV models. The vehicles are equipped with airbags that may deploy with an excessive rate of force because an electrical switch module, called a resettable fuse, needed for the normal operation of the airbag is not working. The switch module is designed to prevent short circuits or electrical overcurrents that could damage the vehicle and void the warranty. If it fails, the airbag could deploy and cause injury or death. Ford says the switch module is at the front of the switch module. The switch module can be reset, which may have caused the airbag to deploy due to the accumulated heat and voltage. The automaker is notifying owners by letter. If the airbag deploys in a crash, Ford recommends that passengers wear seatbelts. The automaker said there have been no accidents or injuries due to the defect. Ford said it will notify owners of any repairs required. Owners will be given a schedule of the repairs they may need to perform, and once they are completed, Ford will post a bulletin on its website. Ford said it sent letters to all 594,000 owners of the vehicles affected on Feb. 14. Owners were able to make appointments to have their vehicles repaired. As of April 13, approximately one-third of owners had their vehicles repaired. As part of the recall, Ford has offered to reprogram the airbag control module free of charge. The company says it was cooperating with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. "While this vehicle is equipped with a resettable fuse, the vehicle's airbag system has been designed to function in a way that is not affected by this defect," Ford said in a news release. Ford said the airbag systems in the four vehicles affected are common in the industry. In 2016, the company recalled 225,000 small SUV and crossover vehicles after a crash in which the airbag helped fatally injure two children. At the time, Ford called it the largest recall related to a vehicle's airbags in U.S. history.Q:
