More than a year after writing a letter that slammed St. Paul's lack of affordable housing, Allie Knorek's life has become one of those rare U.S. experiments in social mobility through political activism — a concept that is, to say the least, unclear. She's currently a college student in New Hampshire, and while her St. Paul housing woes continue, Knorek has found greater success in the state she left behind. Just this weekend, she took her family on a multi-stop journey around northern New England to visit relatives, and as part of that visit, the family visited New Hampshire's capital. "We went to Concord, and we did a day trip up to Portsmouth, and we walked around the statehouse and we saw the governor's mansion, and then we went to Manchester, and we went to the Northway Mall," Knorek said. "It was really weird, because I can't help but think of that a lot because we all have this connection to Saint Paul." Knorek's family has lived in St. Paul since 2007. They had recently made plans to move e79caf774b
