The NSA spy scandal doesn't bode well for Congress as it prepares to take on a mammoth budget for the coming fiscal year. At the same time, partisan wrangling threatens to derail the mammoth defense spending bill. With just over a month until the beginning of the fiscal year, Congress is perilously close to not passing the Department of Defense (DOD) spending bill. The situation is bad enough that Defense Secretary James Mattis may be forced to testify for the first time in his new position — specifically because he's not in Washington but in Turkey. It's the first legislative session in years without a government shutdown, although lawmakers do face a big battle over the fiscal year 2018 budget. And that's partly because they were forced to change their plan for an emergency spending bill to cover operations in Afghanistan. White House legislative affairs chief Marc Short told NPR the budget debate is moving along, though there's plenty of Republican frustration with Trump. "The biggest problem we have right now is there's kind of a Republican anti-Trump wing of our conference that's basically arguing that they're not going to vote for the budget until they get their money to build the wall," he said. And of course, it's not just short-term spending that has Congress in turmoil. The administration has been waging a campaign to halt the leak of hundreds of thousands of documents by former contractor Edward Snowden. It wants them returned to the government, and the defense spending bill provides for it. It's the source of consternation. Rep. Adam Schiff, the top Democrat on the House Intel Committee, has indicated he could support the administration in some measure if Republicans help advance rules requiring intelligence community officials to identify themselves. On Tuesday, Trump himself muddied the waters by complaining that Democrats had "far bigger scandals," a reference to the allegations of Russian election interference made by the intelligence community. The president has been quiet about the subject since his briefing with top officials Friday. "In terms of it affecting them, I don't think they're affected at all," White House legislative affairs director Marc Short told NPR Tuesday. "I think the people who voted for them in the House, I don't think they're even aware that the investigation exists. The only people who've shown an interest in this has been a bunch of reporters," he said. House Speaker Paul Ryan is making the same case: "I don't think this has had any effect on his

The Texas Rangers will probably finish with the worst record in the history of Major League Baseball, and with that, they're one of the biggest draft busts in recent memory. Though the Rangers have won four straight games and are currently just three games back of the Astros in the standings — and though the entire state is proclaiming a massive Yu Darvish comeback — the Rangers are still a historically bad team, even after they won 11 straight games. According to advanced stats website FanGraphs, the Rangers have lost 638 runs this season, the sixth-most in the history of baseball. That number, at the time of writing, is already second to last in all of professional baseball. The defending champion San Francisco Giants have lost 645 runs this season. As this team continues to slide, they're constantly getting worse, which means the draft picks they have coming up could be even worse than the ones they already have. With five picks in the first round and one pick in each of the other rounds, the Rangers own the No. 1 overall pick. Of the 10 picks the Rangers have this year, only five are in the first round, and those five are their first five picks in the draft. Just three of the top 16 overall picks in the draft have come from Texas. Josh Fields, the No. 1 overall selection in the 2014 draft, has yet to make a big league appearance, while DeAndre Smelter, the No. 2 selection in the 2012 draft, has already been traded away. And though it was widely predicted that Darvish would finish this season with a 25-15 record and a 3.52 ERA, he's probably finished the season with a 12-34 record and a 5.22 ERA. Once he's gone, the Rangers will have given away 10 of their top 16 picks in the last three drafts. With a 10-20 record this season, the Rangers have the worst record in franchise history. The 1994 team finished the season with a 39-101 mark. They've also failed to get into the playoffs every season since winning the World Series in 1994, something the Cubs have never done. If the Rangers continue to struggle, they'll likely get stuck with even more of the top talent in the draft. The Astros have the second-worst record in the majors, giving them the No. 1 overall pick. Over the last three drafts,
