Determination of chemical species in solution from resonance Raman spectra. Resonance Raman spectra of carboxylic acids and esters are very similar, but can be distinguished spectroscopically by the C=O stretch mode that occurs at approximately 800 cm⁻¹ due to absorption of the carbon dioxide (CO₂) resonance. This same mode is too weak to be detected in acidic solutions of weak acids, but becomes prominent and is easily detectable as the acidity is increased. In contrast, the Raman spectrum of 3,4-dihydroxyphenylalanine (DOPA) shows no CO₂ absorption and thus can only be seen as a difference spectrum obtained from that of tyrosine. Nonetheless, the spectra of DOPA and tyrosine differ strongly in the region of the phenolic ring and the phenolic-side chain band, largely because of the weakly coupled C-H vibrations. These vibrations are easily resolved by their very low frequency and simple form. Shoreviews - October 23, 2011 Here is a copy of the Good Harbor Beach website, click on the pdf below to read the weekly updates. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is continuing to work with the local government, industry and the public to restore a 1.5-acre beach and riverine area along the Pawtuxet River just north of Three Mile Island. The project will widen River Street and reconstruct a portion of the highway shoulder to widen the roadbed and facilitate the installation of storm drains, Mr. Felix said. "They're going to put some storm equipment in the road," he said. "They're going to widen a section of it. It's going to go to the north end of the bath house." "It's going to change the direction of the road," Mr. Felix said. "And the parking lot, [to] widen the parking lot, change it from having two lots to one lot." Repairs to the bath house are still pending, he said e79caf774b
