NOTE : Photoshop CS2 is a 32-bit version, and it has a full text tool (selecting text) and a vector drawing application (lasso tool). For more information about Photoshop CS2, see the book _Photoshop CS2_ by _Nicholas J. Beggs_ (Wiley) (See the appendix for a chapter summary.) The most popular and most expensive Photoshop book is _Photoshop CS4 All-in-One For Dummies_ by _Bill Brask_, which has a few chapters on Photoshop CC and how to get started with that version. NEW! Photoshop CC is the new high-end version of Photoshop. It works the same way as Photoshop CS4, but its interface is similar to Photoshop CS6. Whether you use a 32-bit version like Photoshop CS2 or Photoshop CC, you'll need to have the .psd file open and navigate to it in your system. ## A Quick Tour of Photoshop Elements Photoshop Elements has been around for a long time and is intended for photographers and other image editors who like to use the programs available to create and edit photos. It contains a _selection tool_, which makes it easier to select portions of an image so that you can crop the background out. It has an _effects filter_, so you can tweak some of the color, sharpen, or blur the image. It has basic _text_ tools for text but doesn't have any graphic design tools. The biggest advantage of Elements is that it's a _web-ready_ program, so it creates graphics that you can use online. (Check out Chapter 15 for details about using graphics online.) Photoshop Elements is a fairly expensive program, so most people buy a copy in addition to Photoshop to get the features and speed they need. A beginner can use Elements to create images, but it doesn't have as many tools as Photoshop for creating advanced images. You can use Elements to sharpen images, but you can't sharpen other parts of the image and create images with 3D effects. If you prefer to start with Elements, you can buy just Elements and use it for editing and creating graphics. (However, if you like the ability to work in layers, then Photoshop is more robust. You can do most of the same things in Elements but if you want to work in layers, you'll need to buy Photoshop.) # THE LAYER BACKGROUND

Q: Vue.js Dropdown as an Input So, this is an interesting question. I have a v-select for my users to choose from a list of items: Save However, I want this to act as an input as well, and I don't want to actually put the text in the input directly. Is there a way to do this, where when the button is clicked, a v-select appears, with the list of items from the v-model, and then when the "save" button is clicked, it gets the input text to save? A: You can do it like this: First add an input field in a column below the button: Save On setType: setType: function (e) { this.member.type_selection = e.target.value; }. You can also remove required="required" when using the inputs and making it required only when it is empty Whether you know it or not, there's more than just one way to get organized. There are six different types of disorganized people to be found, and it's important to know which ones you are. 1. THE HOMEWORK PENDANT This person collects and stores everything they need for an upcoming assignment, assignment or anything they feel should be done within a set time. The problem with this type of organization is that they create a very disorganized place to store homework. If you find yourself having to search for pens, or lose an assignment because you misplaced the folder where you put it, consider yourself Homework Pendant. 2. THE QUIET SLEEPER The QUIET SLEEPER is the

Q: How to draw a color ramp on top of the image on iOS using Swift? I want to reproduce the color ramp generated by the camera. Here's a link to the post on how the color ramp is created: this post When the user clicks on it, the green slider will be transferred to the green image(which is the subject). I've been trying to replicate it in Swift but I'm finding this post useful in doing that: I'm able to replicate the "hue shift" part but don't know how to do the "color ramp" part. Here's an example: I'm creating the slider using the following code: @IBOutlet weak var slider: UISlider! @IBOutlet weak var image: UIImageView! override func viewDidLoad() { slider.value = 0 slider.addTarget(self, action: #selector(handleSliderValueChange(_:)), for: .valueChanged) if let color = UIColor.fromRGB(245, 255, 255) { colorPicker.backgroundColor = color } image.image = UIImage.init(color: colorPicker.backgroundColor!) image.clipsToBounds = true image.layer.cornerRadius = 15.0 image.layer.borderWidth = 2 image.layer.borderColor = UIColor.lightGray.cgColor image.image = UIImage.init(color: color) } A: There is no really clean solution to this. But here is a snippet of how you could achieve the effect using a UIVisualEffectView and image views. First, set up a UIVisualEffectView in Interface Builder Next, add the UIVisualEffectView to your ViewController // The visual effect view let vw = UIVisualEffectView(effect: UIBlurEffect(style:.Light
