The Se- and acid-labile, metal-binding characteristics of human serum proteins have been investigated using 2,4,6-trinitrobenzenesulphonate and 37 metals and the protein-metal ratios of different serum and tissue samples have been examined. A total of 185 human sera and 7 bovine sera were studied and it was found that the only essential metals detectable were Cu²⁺, Fe²⁺, Zn²⁺, and, in some samples, Ni²⁺. Of these, only Cu²⁺ and Fe²⁺ are bound at a significant level in serum. Binding of Cd²⁺ was found in only 3 of 185 human sera while binding of Cr³⁺ was detected in 9 of 20 bovine sera. More than 50% of all serum samples contained no measurable levels of Co²⁺ or Mn²⁺. It is concluded that both Cu²⁺ and Fe²⁺ binding to serum proteins, especially albumin, may be involved in the maintenance of the normal levels of these essential metals in the serum and that both Cd²⁺ and Cr³⁺ may be of significance only at concentrations above a critical level. The significance of this study is that it shows that Cd²⁺, Cr³⁺, Co²⁺, and Mn²⁺ are definitely not essential metals in humans, a conclusion in contrast to the situation with these metals in animals. The complete nucleotide sequence of M-type mRNA encoding a calmodulin-binding peptide from rat liver. We have isolated and characterized a cDNA clone corresponding to M-type mRNA for calmodulin binding peptide (CBP) in rat liver. The nucleotide sequence of this cDNA was determined and the amino acid sequence of the preproCBP was deduced from the nucleotide sequence. The preproCBP consisted of 76 amino acids and had a predicted molecular mass of 8.6 kDa. A nonapeptide (FKDLMAIDFE) for binding to calmodulin was located just before the signal peptide sequence (residues 1-25) of the preproCBP. The present invention pertains generally to magnetic read/write 0cc13bf012
